Description :

PDF-9105d | David Castriota examines one of the most important monuments of early Roman Imperial art, the Ara Pacis Augustae, the sculptured marble altar built to celebrate the peace, prosperity, and stability initiated by the reign of Augustus in the later first century b.c. Castriota argues that the floral decoration of the altar enclosure was profoundly significant, operating as a visual counterpart to th... The Ara Pacis Augustae and the Imagery of Abundance in Later Greek and Early Roman Imperial Art
